Testament de Jean Meslier (French Edition)

Jean Meslier, ou Mellier, né à Mazerny (Ardennes) le 15 juin 1664, est un prêtre et philosophe des Lumières français, curé d'Étrépinny où il est mort au début de l'été 1729. Son existence n'a été connue qu'à partir de la publication en 1762 par Voltaire, sous le titre de Testament de J. Meslier, d'un texte qu'il présentait comme un extrait d'un texte beaucoup plus volumineux, retrouvé chez lui et dans lequel un curé professait avec détermination son athéisme et se livrait à une critique radicale des injustices de la société de son temps. Ce texte, au titre origi

What others say about this ebook:

Review 1:

It wasn't clear to me from the information on the page that this is just the second half of the book. Presumably the first half is available elsewhere.

As the product page does mention, the quality is pretty bad. It's a scanned copy that's been reprinted. It looks like the original was roughly paperback size, so the choice of page size in this edition (9.5in x 7.3in) doesn't make a lot of sense. The copied pages have been sort of scaled to fit, sort of.

Review 2:

The book "Superstition in All Ages," attributed to Jean Meslier and published by Anna Knoop, is patently a forgery. This is surprising because this time it was an atheist who perpetrated the forgery and, in sharp contrast with some religious writers, particularly Christian, atheists generally do not need to distort the facts in order to prove their point. But in this particular instance Miss Knoop has taken the liberty of attributing to Jean Meslier--the good parish priest who wrote a testament asking forgiveness of his parishioners for having preached Christianity to them for forty years--a book written by the Baron d'Holbach, the only openly atheistic writer among all the "philosophes" of the French Enlightenment of the XVII century. The purpose of this forgery was to make Meslier look like an atheist, whereas in reality he was only a deist, like so many of his intellectual contemporaries. Indeed, Meslier--as we can ascertain from Voltaire's abstract of the priest's testament-- did not deny the existence of God but, as a deist, he did resolutely reject a personal God who listens to prayers, performs miracles, and has a preference for certain peoples. What he most vigorously denied was the divinity of Jesus and the claims and dogmatic assertions of the Christian Churches. The truth is that we do not have the original Testament of Meslier, but only an abstract edited and published by Voltaire. What the original manuscript contained we do not know and most probably never will. What did the forgery consist in? Simply in attributing the atheistic pages written by d'Hobach under the title "Common Sense" to Meslier--a total of 228 out of the 339 pages of "Superstition in All Ages." And how do we know that this book is a forgery? Simply because we only have to look at the first pages of d'Holbach's book to recognize in it the words that Knoop put verbatim in Meslier's mouth. This is how both Knoop's "Superstition in All Ages" and d'Holbach's "Common Sense" start: "When we coolly examine the opinions of men, we are very much surprised that..., etc." Unfortunately the two long excerpts of "Common Sense" which were originally available in the Internet are now inaccessible, quite probably intentionally censored and removed. Obviously its 206 paragraphs containing powerful arguments against the existence of God were considered too deleterious to make them accessible to the world. For these reasons, in spite of being a forgery, Knoop's book is important not so much for disclosing what Meslier's authentic thoughts were, but for allowing a critical assessment of the strength and weaknesses of d'Holbach's atheistic arguments. For this reason this book is highly recommended to thinking and open-minded readers.
